

Mexico

Día de los Muertos

In many communities across Mexico, families come together in early November to celebrate Día de los Muertos, the Day of the Dead. It is a joyful, colorful holiday where families remember relatives who have passed away by telling happy stories about them. Many families build a special altar at home called an ofrenda, decorated with bright orange marigold flowers, candles, and photographs. It is a time of love, memory, and celebrating life together.

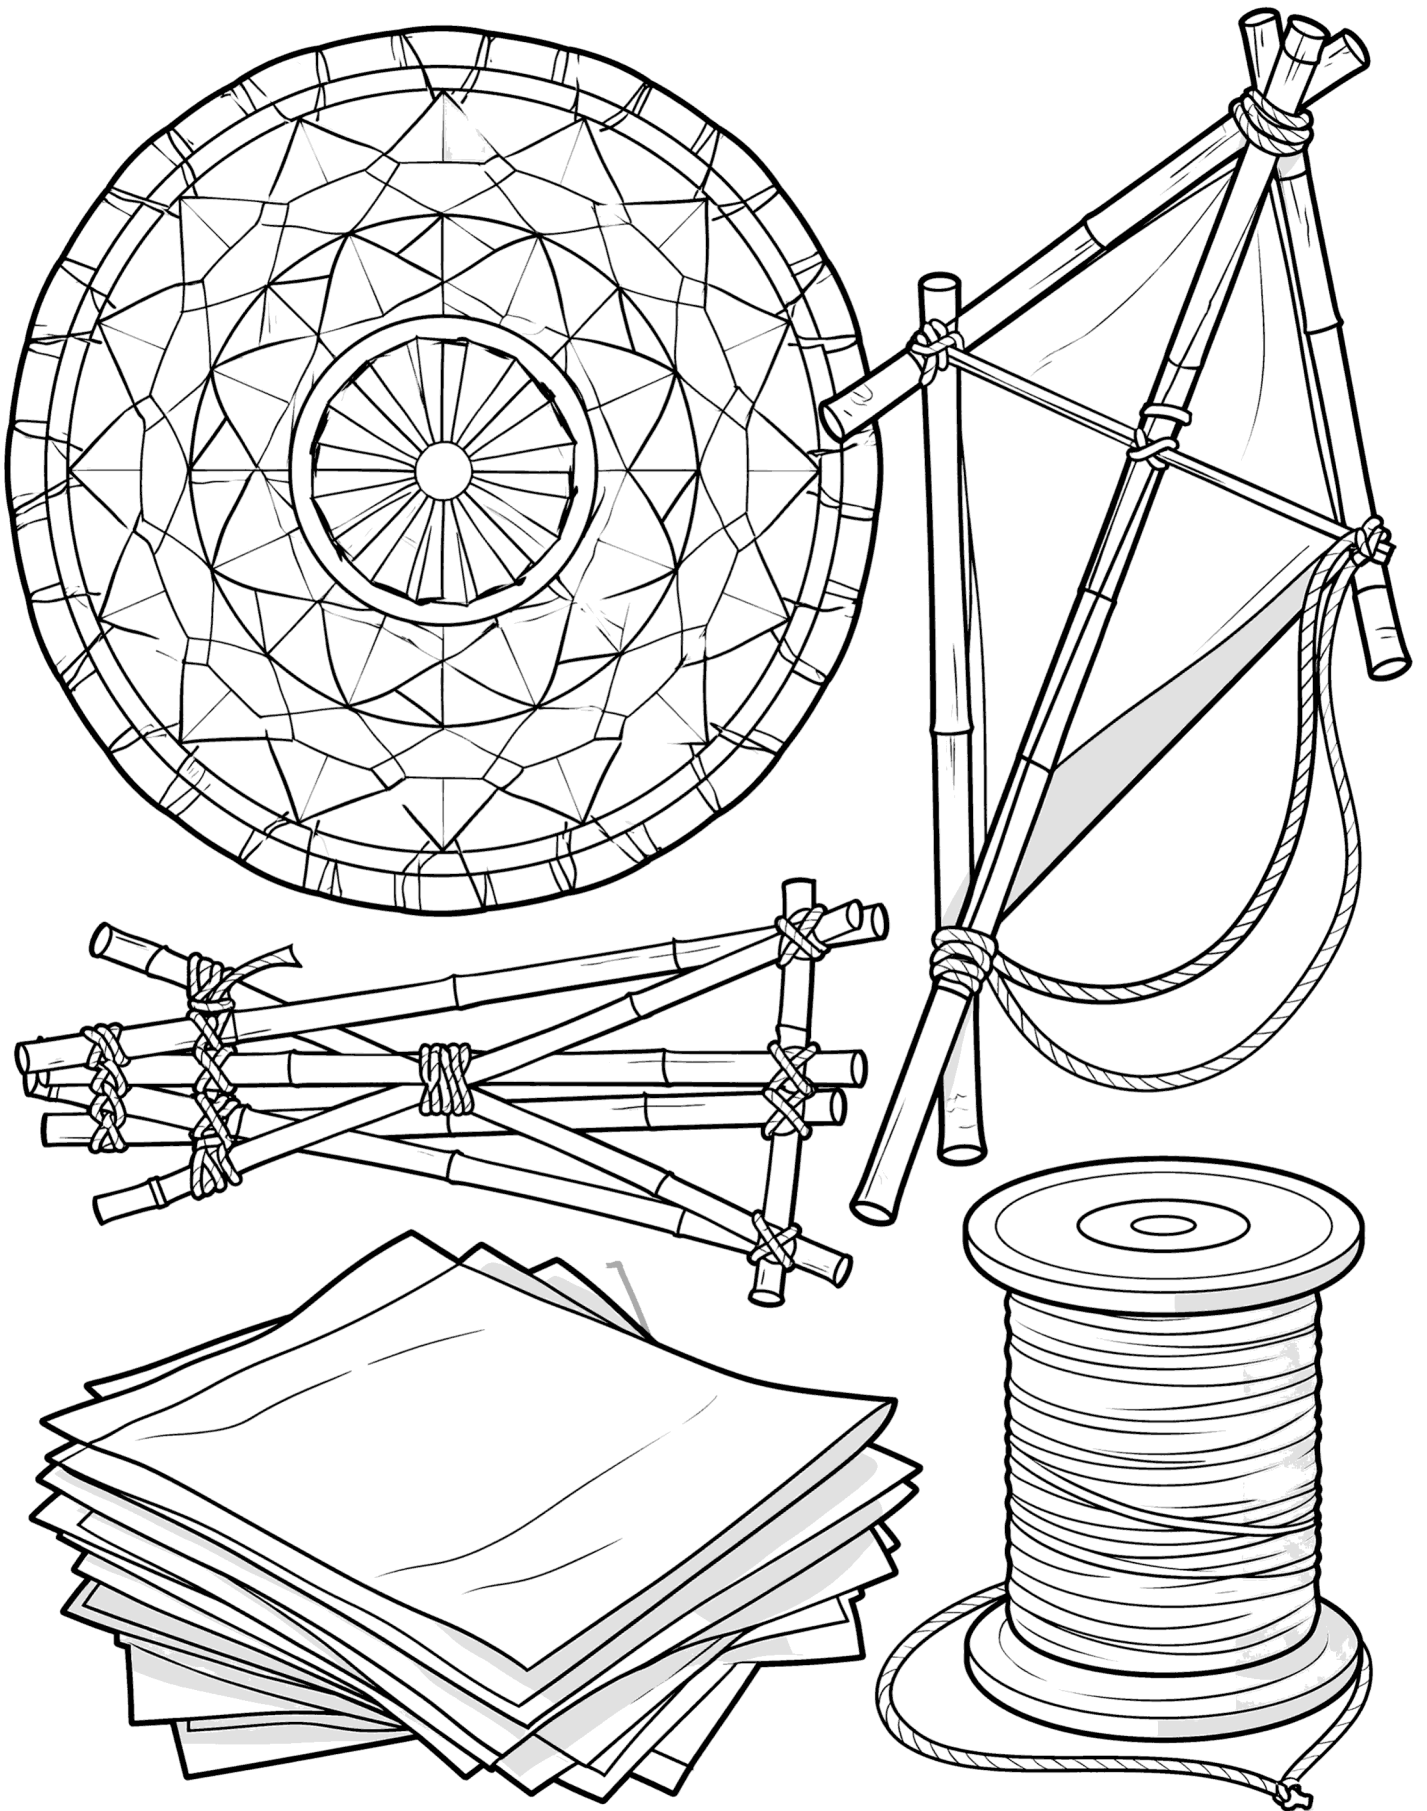

Guatemala

Festival de Barriletes Gigantes

In the towns of Sumpango and Santiago Sacatepéquez, many families spend up to six months building enormous, colorful kites out of bamboo and tissue paper — some as wide as a swimming pool! On November 1st, communities gather near the cemetery to fly these giant kites high into the sky, believing they help carry messages and prayers to relatives who have passed away. It is a proud, joyful way for whole communities to work together and remember loved ones.

Loved these pages? Visit 27 countries this autumn!

Autumn Traditions Around the World for Kids
An educational coloring and activity book for ages 6-9.
Three pages for every country and tradition.

Get the full book on Amazon:
amazon.com/dp/B0HLQ5CMR3